AARP in The Virgin Islands Continues to Work for Virgin Islanders Through the Outbreak of the Coronavirus

St. Croix, US Virgin Islands, March 23, 2020 – AARP in The Virgin Islands is actively involved in the monitoring of the Coronavirus-COVID 19 and the recent developments at the local level in particular. AARP in The Virgin Islands is working to provide and share information to AARP VI Members as well as the local communities and Virgin Islanders on recommendations, guidelines and measures that are being implemented to prevent the spread of the virus as the local VI Government shares it. We also continue to communicate and share National news as it is released from our National Office. We ask all our members and Virgin Islanders to continue to visit our local Facebook page – AARP Virgin Islands or Facebook.com/aaprvi , to follow us on Twitter: Twitter.com/aarpvi , and our local web page aarp.org/vi to obtain the latest information on what we are doing locally.

AARP has canceled our external events until further notice. While convening events is a core part of our mission, we have changed our approach in light of the coronavirus (COVID-19) outbreak.

At AARP, we have been promoting the health and well-being of older Americans for over 60 years. Our top priority is the health and well-being of staff, volunteers, members and the community at large. We are monitoring developments closely and are taking precautions recommended by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and local public health agencies.

We want you to know that AARP is providing information and resources to help older people and caregivers protect themselves from the virus and prevent its spread. You can find AARP's coronavirus resources at http://www.aarp.org/coronavirus…. We also point you to www.cdc.gov/coronavirus, and your state and local health agencies for the latest information.

Our CEO has sent out a message to all members and the public at large of what we are doing to continue to advocate for all Americans. Read the message from our CEO Jo Ann Jenkins on how You Can Count on Us to Fight for You!
