Travelers Being Screened at Both Airports

U.S. VIRGIN ISLANDS – Virgin Islands National Guard personnel are busy screening passengers at both of the Territory's airports.

Guardsmen and Guardswomen assist passengers with filling out health questionnaires, taking thermal temperatures of travelers who arrive and checking for COVID-19 test results.

The V.I. National Guard are working with staff from the Departments of Health and Tourism, and the Virgin Islands Port Authority oversees the operations at King Airport on St. Thomas and Rohlsen Airport on St. Croix.

Virgin Islands National Guard personnel check travelers' COVID-19 test results at King Airport on St. Thomas.

Arriving passengers at Rohlsen Airport on St. Croix fill out health screening questionnaires.

Travelers arriving at Rohlsen Airport show their COVID-19 test results to a Department of Health staff member.

A visitor from Texas shows his COVID-19 test results to a Department of Health staff member at Rohlsen Airport on St. Croix.

V.I. National Guard personnel direct arriving passengers at King Airport on St. Thomas where to bring their health screening questionnaires.
